

Broughton Labour Councillors Committed to Education

Education at the Heart of Community Regeneration is happening before our eyes. Salford City Council's continued commitment to providing our young people an education fit for the 21st century is to be applauded when we see the new school in Lower Broughton to accommodate the amalgamation of Charlestown and North Grecian Street primary schools

Councillor McIntyre, a member of the Shadow Governors Board of the new school says, "the school is programmed to open by September 2011 and will probably be the last new primary school in Salford for a while. The parents deserve the best education for their children and this new school will make that easier to achieve".

Labour listening to local residents

"Talking to residents who use this space we need to make sure this area is respected and clean and safe for young children, this is not to be used as a drinking den!" said Stephen Ord

Labour Working with Local Community

Albion Green saved by the efforts of the local community, Councillors and local Labour activist and spokesperson Stephen Ord "Working as a team with the residents we managed to save this space of land and at the same time encourage developers to build new homes across the road"
